SEC. MELLON IS PLANNING TO CUT TAXES

CONGRESS IS ASKED TO CHOP OFF MILLIONS IN TAXES

Corporations Are Laden Too Greatly With Taxes, Says Secretary of the Treasury—Bulk of Small Income Tax Payers Will Not Be Aided In the Slash—Opposition Ahead—Repeal of Inheritance and Estate Tariff Urged—Auto Excise To Continue—Secretary Widens the Breach Between the Administration and Forces Demanding Larger Cut.

Throwing down the gage of battle for one of the hottest revenue fights in recent years, Andrew W. Mellon, secretary of the treasury Monday called upon congress to reduce taxes but to stop at $225,500,000.

Widening, instead of narrowing, the breach between the administration and congressional and organized business forces, demanding a larger cut, Mr. Mellon's program signalized a finish fight, with Progressive Republicans probably holding the balance of power.

Democrats are lined up to force a reduction of from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000, with many Republicans demanding only slightly less.

Progressive Republicans leaned toward the Mellon position, emphasizing scaling down of the public debt rather than taxes.

To the House Ways and Means committee, opening its hearings on the coming tax reduction bill, Mr. Mellon urged these specific reductions:

A 1½ per cent cut in the corporation rate, bringing it down to 12 per cent, with an estimated revenue loss of $135,000,000.

Lightening the burden on small corporations by permitting those with net incomes of less than $25,000, and not more than 10 stockholders, to pay on partnership rates, estimated loss $30,000,000 to $35,000,000.

Lowering of surtax rates on incomes of from $16,000 to $20,000 with a loss of $50,000,000.

Repeal of the inheritance tax, chopping $7,000,000 off the revenues.

Tax exemption for income from bankers' acceptances held by foreign central banks of issue.

Mr. Mellon opposed any change in the automobile and admission taxes.

Coupled with Mr. Mellon's program was an especially sharp warning to congress against risking a deficit in the national treasury, or assuming that treasury estimates or revenue were too low.

"In these figures the treasury has not consciously nor as a matter of policy played safe," Mr. Mellon told the committee. "If tax reductions are made or appropriations voted on the assumption that the present figures understate probable future receipts, responsibility for such reductions or appropriations must be assumed by those who advocate them."

"The treasury has placed the probable receipts at the highest figures compatible with the most dependable forecasts and facts which careful and disinterested investigation could secure."

"It should be remembered that estimates do not include any expenditures that may be incurred by reason of new legislation. The treasury believes that tax reduction should not in any event be in excess of approximately $225,000,000."

Mr. Mellon's surplus estimates, far more than his tax reduction figures, were lower than congress had been led to expect. The surplus for the treasury year ending next June 30 was stated by Mr. Mellon as $455, 000,000. That for the following year he estimated at $274,000,000.

The difference of $181,000,000 between these two estimates was declared to be more than accounted for by a prospective decline of $87,000,000 in net back tax collections, and one of $145,000,000 in repayments of loans to railroads.

Altho the committee had not expected by Mellon's reduction proposals would substantially exceed $250,000,000, there had been informal estimates from the treasury of a surplus in the treasury year approximating $600,000,000.

"As an essential preliminary to any program of tax reduction," Mr. Mellon warned, "it is necessary to estimate revenue and expenditures not only for the present but also for the next fiscal year. It is further desirable to ascertain, if possible, by eliminating temporary and unusual items, what the normal revenues of the government are under existing tax laws, given average business conditions."

"Financial policy, to be sound, must not be based upon the experience of a single year. We must not be unduly impressed by the revenue results of a year of unusual prosperity or a year of large receipts from temporary sources."

Preserving Eggs

"Guarantizing eggs" is a process for preserving them. In guarantizing eggs, the eggs are dipped into a weak oil and wax solution and then put in storage. This process is a new one and has proved very popular. It is claimed that the solution keeps the air from penetrating the shell and thus gives a better preserved egg. The guarantizing egg brings a higher price than the ordinary cold storage eggs.

Spring Water for City

Royal spring, at Georgetown, Ky., said to be one of the largest of its kind in the world, was named in 1775. The water bursts from a high bluff of limestone rock, flows through the west end of the town and empties into the Elkhorn river, nearly a mile from its source. Georgetown, now with a population of about 5,000, gets its entire water supply from this spring and has done so for many years. At one time a woolen mill, a grist mill and several other establishments were operated by water power supplied by this spring.—Kansas City Star.

Washington's Politics

Washington was a Federalist, and a strong party man at that, but he was unanimously elected to the Presidency by the Federalists and Democrats. He was also the unanimous choice when running for re-election. John Adams was vice president under Washington and succeeded him in the Presidency. There was a contest, however, in 1796 between Adams, Federalist, and Jefferson, Democrat, in which the former was the winner.

TEMPERANCE WOMEN MEET IN THIS CITY

Interesting Program Rendered At the Home of Mrs. Gussman--Marshall Bill.

The Circleville Woman's Christian Temperance union met Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. Abbie Gussman, East Franklin street.

The president, Mrs. Lulu Marion, opened the meeting with scripture reading and prayer. A short business session followed during which a letter was read from Mrs. Florence D. Richard, state president, urging the women to get out and vote in November. Mrs. Nellie Stoffer then took charge of the following program. A pretty little duet was sung by Mrs. Theresa Hull and Mrs. Bessie Long "Spend One Hour With Jesus." Mrs. Dell Chard, of Columbus, here in the interest of child welfare work was introduced and gave a splendid talk.

Mrs. Lulu Marion, delegate to the state W. C. T. U., convention at Elyria, October 21-24, gave a very pleasing report. She spoke very enthusiastically of the wonderful addresses she had heard, of the many important things stressed, among them the Marshall bill. Mr. Marshall himself was present at the convention and among the many things he said, one thing stands out. "The Marshall bill is an important bill, the people should watch for any bill that has drawn fire as the Marshall bill shows which way the wind is drifting and how the wets are eagerly advertising it, and trying to pick it to pieces by publicity."

There were 510 delegates present at the state convention among them a Mrs. Berekat from far off Syria, who gave many wonderful addresses and brought samples of beautiful lace work done by the Syrian children and women. Mrs. Myrtle Noggle sang an inspiring solo "Hold the Fort."

Miss Mary Harpster, president of the Salem Union was present and brought greetings from her Union. She spoke also of her work in the county and recited a beautiful poem "Little Will."

Mrs. Lucy E. Price, also gave a few remarks. At the conclusion of the program a delightful social hour followed during which delicious home-made candy and popcorn balls were served by the hostess. The following visitors were present from the Salem Union of Kingston; Miss Mary Harpster, Mrs. Lillian Hinton, Mrs. Bessie Allen, Mrs. May Evans, Mrs. Minnie Morris, Mrs. Bessie Sheridan, Mrs. Margaret Veach, Mrs. Rebecca Martin, Mrs. Mary Keister and little Miss Ruth Elizabeth Sheridan.

BORAH'S AMBITION

Not Presidency, But To Be the Moses of the Drys, It Is Declared By Analysts.

Perish the thought that William E. Borah wants or would take a nomination for President! For he himself has said it, and it's greatly to his credit that he's thinking of nothing of the sort. He has even pushed, Norris to the front as a candidate. But his ambition to be the Moses of the dry movement is unmistakable. He would lead the vast multitude of Israelites without guilt out of the wilderness of Volstead verbalisms, of misconceptions, of serpent plagues and regrettable graft revelations; he would smite the Horeb Rock and only water should flow forth; he would open the way to a real Land of Promise in which the Demon Rum would be forgotten.

That is what the Idaho Senator means when he accepts an invitation to speak in Carnegie Hall on November 12, demanding that the Republican party yield to the Poland insistence and take an open stand for the enforcement of Prohibition by every force at the command of the United States Government. He has said that he isn't tied to the Volstead plan, that if any one can offer what is better he will accept it. But on universal dryness he is determined and inflexible.

The sincerity of Mr. Borah The Eagle has never questioned. He believes what he says. But as Idaho is to the State of New York so is the Borah View of human nature to the metropolitan view. The Rule of Three has many and various applications.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Prohibition Be the Issue.

What ultimate effect the Borah crusade will exert upon platforms, nominations for the presidency and minor contests, as for Senate and House, may not readily be predicted. As a matter of fact, most aspirants for national office today reflect the wet or dry sentiments of their States or constituencies, consequently few changes in personnel may be expected, even should Senator Borah succeed in exciting the country. Carried to its logical conclusion, however, his campaign would render insignificant all other issues and qualifications except the stand of every candidate upon the liquor issue; whether, he—or she—believes the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act wise and enforceable or whether they are not true temperance measures and should be modified.—Boston Transcript.

Only Praise For Sincerity.

Whatever may be thought of Senator Borah's views on prohibition; whatever quarrel there may be with his terminology about "nullification" and his identification of the Volstead act with the Eighteenth Amendment; there should be only praise for his sincerity and a profound respect for the courage with which he challenges both the major parties, resolved as they are on evading any clear position on the one subject in which the public interest is keenest. Since in both parties there is an irreconcilable division, the politicians of both are bound to forget in the national platforms the existence of the Volstead law and to take refuge in "an insipid meaningless generality," as Mr. Borah says, about law enforcement. * * * Is this boggling to last indefinitely? By whatever forlorn hopes initiated on either side, preceded by whatever disintegration and reintegration of parties, if that is to come, a straight popular decision on prohibition should be had. Meanwhile, what noble figures the Democratic and the Republican parties, are slinking away from the mention of the great national taboo, afraid unutterably of the one issue chief in the talk and minds of the voters!—New York Times.

FAMED LINE OF WOODENWARE

The Eagle Woodenware Manufacturing Co., which has grown to be one of Hamilton's most prosperous enterprises, came into the business world in 1889, with the organization of the Eagle Cooperage Works, at Cincinnati.

Nicholas Fritsch, the organizer of the firm, was the grandfather of F. M. Fritsch, the present president of the company and it was his untiring efforts in the manufacture of barrels and kegs that led to the ultimate growth of the business, it is today.

At the death of Nicholas Fritsch, the business changed hands to the son, Frank M. Fritsch. In 1900, the firm moved to Circleville where they started the manufacture of mop wringers in addition to barrels and kegs.

In 1911 they finally located in Hamilton and during the 16 years of operations here have built up a substantial business. The firm's name was changed to The Eagle Woodenware Manufacturing Co., upon its removal to Hamilton.

Officers of the firm are: F. M. Fritsch, president and treasurer; E. Fritsch, vice-president and L. B. Fritsch, secretary.

They are the sole manufacturers of the famous Eagle Mop Wringer and Bucket and in addition manufacture hydra water motor washing machines and Superior Folding Wash and Wringer Benches.—The Hamilton (O.) Daily News.

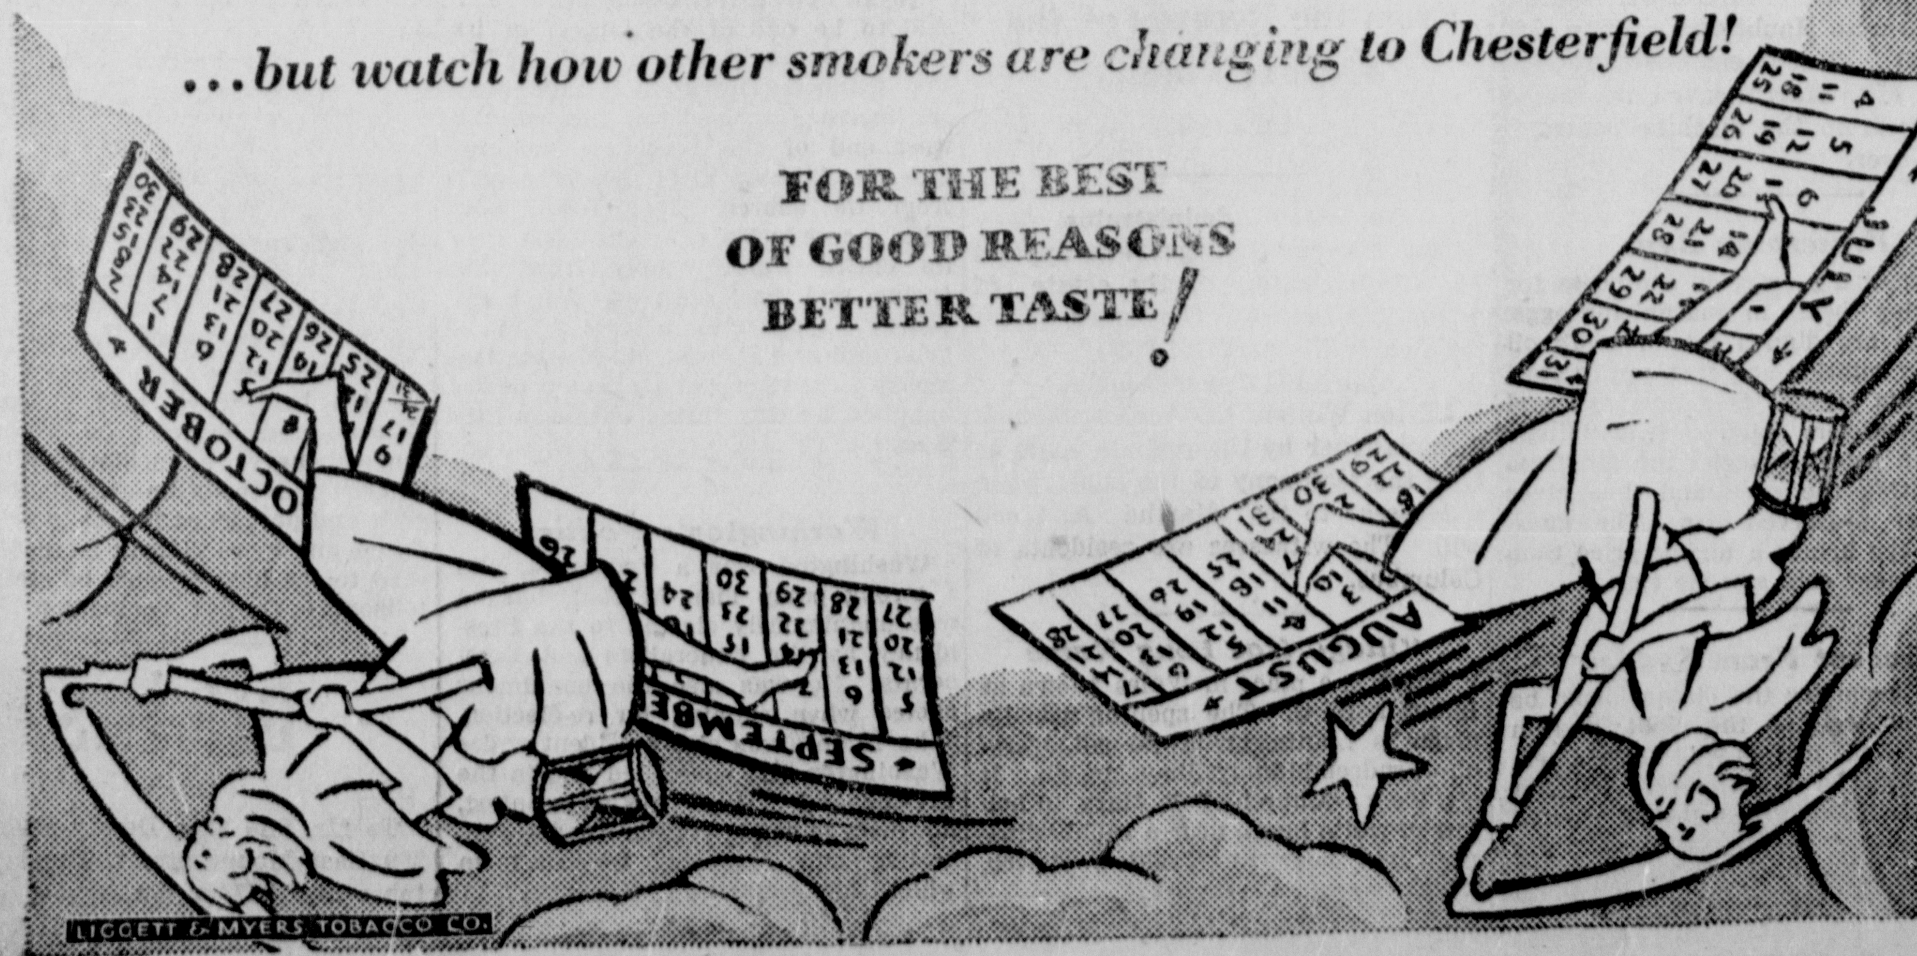

Circleville's loss was Hamilton's gain.

Coat With New Military Collar Worn by Actress

The high military collar is one of the new features of fall and winter coats. Norma Shearer, the featured motion picture actress, favors an unusual collar of this type by wearing a coat of beige with a striking military collar and frills in her latest starring vehicle, "After Midnight." With this costume Miss Shearer carries a reptile skin bag in green and beige to give an additional striking note.

Sports Fur Coats Are Chic for Autumn Days

The fur coat cut on sports lines is more in vogue this season than ever, reports the fashion scout of Vanity Fair Magazine. "The woman of the world," she points out, "knows that no outdoor costume is quite so smart and comfortable as the sports fur coat for chilly autumn days, and at hunt breakfasts, race meets, and so on, her furs make their debut.

"Fur coats cut on sports lines have been popular for several years and each year they grow more important. This season there are four smart silhouettes for such coats. First of all, there is the straight tailored coat. This is the prevailing type and beyond all doubt the most appropriate for every age.

"Second comes the coat that is slightly flared from the shoulders all the way around, to give a diagonal closing. In these coats the collar runs all the way to the hem. Closely related to this type is the youthful coat that is flared all the way around and fastens in a straight line. It often has a scarf-collar that ties in a bow at the neck. It is an attractive fashion, but rather trying, suitable only for very slim figures.

"Fourth comes the box jacket. This is extremely smart when it is part of an ensemble of the same material as the coat lining. But if it is worn with a heterogeneous collection of dresses, it recalls college campuses in just-after-the-war days.

"Sports fur coats have always been light in color—the light gray of kid and kimmer, the gray-beige of antelope, the copper-beige of pony, are familiar tones. A new color note of this season is a golden-beige—almost yellow—in such furs as sheared panther and Swedish ermine, which is ermine dyed a yellow tone.

"As to the furs themselves—in general they are flat-surfaced, both because this is a general trend in furs this season and because flat furs lend themselves well to the tailored lines that are smart for sports. Sheared kid, which is almost as fine and soft as breitschwanz, American broadtail, and the inevitable pony, are outstanding examples of smart, flat furs. Ermine, too, paradoxical as it may seem, has entered the sports mode—a number of very smart, youthful coats are made of summer ermine and Swedish ermine.

"A notable exception to the rule of flat-surfaced furs is shaggy goat, which is again very popular this autumn. Nutria and beaver, of course, are perennial, and are always in good taste. In the same way, one always sees a certain amount of leopard for informal sports wear."

Slant Line Supplants Straight, Long Popular

A note about Paris fashions says that in many gowns the straight line so long popular has given place to the slant. A kasha coat-frock is described with not a straight line in it. The bodice slants, the sleeves cross and fall away in scallops, the skirt has an umbrella line which is broken into sweeping but unequal scallops, and the collar has no particular shape. Many dresses, the same authority says, have draped backs that look like capes cut into strange shapes with lines. Skirts do not fall straightly and simply but dip and rise and swirl about in movement. Paris as usual declares for dark colors during the day and vivid colors are for evening only.

POETIC IDEA BORN IN CHILDISH MIND

Richard Le Gallienne, poet, was talking about poets at a reception: "Poets are children," he said. "I have known all the great poets of our time, and they were all simple-minded, unaffected, childlike. Yes, poets are children, and children are poets."
"One summer I visited an encampment of little country weekers—slum children who were enjoying a week-end holiday in the country. It was evening, the new moon was setting, and a small country weeker said as he gazed at the western sky: "I wonder what becomes of all the old moons?"
"I guess," said another urchin, who stood beside him, "I guess they cut 'em up for stars. Bill."

Inhabiting the deep are two gigantic sharks, either one of which may reach a length of 40 feet. The basking shark is found in northern seas, occasionally straying southward to our coasts, and the whale shark seems to have its principal habitat in the Indian ocean, though stragglers have turned up as far away as the shores of Florida. One such monster is on exhibition at Miami and will repay a visit to anyone who chances to be in that vicinity.

Goats Have Queer Horns

One of the species of wild goats found among the lofty peaks of the Himalayas is notable for its twisted horns, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. They somewhat resemble huge screws, are three feet long and are set on the head to form a "V." The home ranges of the animals are nearly inaccessible to hunters.

Give Attention to Poultry Ills

Big Mistake by Many Farmers to Let Their Chickens Shift for Themselves.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture)

Because the poultry industry represents an annual turnover of more than a billion dollars, and because of recent changes in the organization and management of egg and poultry production, Dr. J. R. Mohler of the United States Department of Agriculture recommends to the members of the American Veterinary Medical Association, meeting at Philadelphia, "what we as veterinarians must do to keep our flocks healthy in order that meat and egg production shall not diminish. We are dealing with fowl not only from a pathological standpoint, but as commercial units on which a great industry is based."

Doctor Mohler pointed out that the United States is the most important poultry-raising country in the world, producing more than one-third of the world's supply, that breeders sold 800,000,000 baby chicks last year, that the hens collectively lay eggs at the rate of 760 a second or 2,000,000,000 dozen a year, and that the annual value of poultry products is now considerably in excess of $1,000,000,000 or 13 per cent of the total live stock production of the country, and outranked only by dairy products and the swine industry.

Poultry Raising Incidental.

For years, Doctor Mohler commented, poultry raising was an incidental enterprise on the American farm. Poultry diseases were regarded as of little consequence, and chickens were left to shift for themselves. "The last decade, however," he said, "has witnessed an amazing change in the scope and methods of poultry and egg production, as the industry has rapidly forged to the front line of dignified commercial productive enterprise. The humble hen is now recognized as an asset, a chief source of income, and as such is favored with the best of feed, shelter and attention," and the increase in size and profitability of flocks makes it increasingly feasible for poultry raisers to employ veterinarians in case of disease in their flocks.

Need More Investigations.

There is definite need, Doctor Mohler believes, for wider and more fundamental investigations not only of avian tuberculosis but of other infectious and parasitic diseases. He explained that it had been found true, but was not generally known, that turkeys harbored the little worms which cause the disease of gaps in chickens, although the turkey is not usually affected. When turkeys and young chicks are reared together it is difficult to avoid losses of the young chicks. Advance has been made in the development of vaccines for several poultry diseases. Determination of when to use such remedies must rest with the veterinarians. Other fields for fundamental research in poultry husbandry include feeding mixtures and balanced rations for various purposes. Some diseases, it has been found, can be controlled by proper nutrition.

The most effective control of poultry diseases must come through poultry raisers themselves who will employ veterinarians skilled in poultry diseases. Governmental and state action in case of diseases of poultry should aim at the protection of domestic fowls from foreign contagion, to prevent the spread of poultry diseases from state to state, and to eradicate communicable diseases within a state when they appear.

DOOM IS SEEN OF BATTLESHIP

Big Craft to Give Way to Speedy Vessels.

Washington.—The battleship is likely to be scrapped or relegated to a subordinate position when the Washington disarmament conference reconvenes in 1931, or at the latest when the Washington treaties expire in 1936.

The new ten 10,000-ton cruisers President Coolidge wishes to have congress authorize next winter will be built with a new conception of the navy in mind which will call for greater surface speed and a wider use of the airplane than was possible when even the latest battleships were built.

The airplane carriers Lexington and Saratoga, which the United States has been building since 1922, have caused a complete revision of the ideas of capital ships of the future. The details of these ships are still secret, but the Navy department is greatly pleased with the vessels as engines of war. They have a displacement of 33,000 tons and a speed, it is said, greater than 32.50 knots an hour. Each will carry, it is said, as many as 100 airplanes.

The 10,000-ton cruisers also have a speed of 32 knots an hour and the 7,500-ton cruisers, of which we have ten afloat, have a speed of 33.50 knots an hour.

Into a fleet of which these fast ships with a minimum of 32 knots speed are an important part, the dreadnought battleship with a speed of 21 knots fits just about as well as the old monitors, which survived till after the Spanish war with their speed of eight or ten knots, fit into the more modern battleship fleets of fifteen or twenty years ago.

No fleet can move any faster than its slowest member, so the effect of the battleship would be to slow down the new powerful and speedy cruisers and airplane carriers. At least that is the way naval thought is now trending.

The ten new 10,000-ton cruisers, which President Coolidge will ask congress to authorize, will bring the American cruiser strength up to about the minimum this country proposed at the Geneva conference.

Wrong Impressions. Therefore, their authorization is not to be regarded as the beginning of a naval race with Great Britain or as impairing the prospect of cruiser limitation in negotiations that may follow the failure at Geneva.

With that authorization the total of cruisers built, building and authorized, will not be above the lowest point at which an agreement is possible between the United States, Great Britain and Japan, namely, 250,000 tons. The United States has now ten 7,000-ton cruisers, and eight 10,000-ton cruisers in process of building, a total of 155,000 tons. Ten more 10,000-ton ships would bring the total up to 255,000 tons.

France Finds Census Short by 23 Names

Paris.—By Presidential decree, the official population of France has been increased by twenty-three souls. Guide books, histories, almanacs and other informative volumes which give the population of France as 40,745,851 are in error. The figure should be 40,745,874.

When the last census was taken, the names of twenty-three inhabitants of the village of Honnecourt, near Cambrai, were first carefully jotted down, and then overlooked. The fact that they had not been included in the grand total was discovered only a short time ago, whereupon the President of the republic signed a decree correcting the error.

Rubber Substitute Found in Soy Bean

Urbana, Ill.—From chop suey sprouts to a substitute for rubber is a long road for a bean to travel, but research work on the development of by-products of the soy bean exhibited at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, this fall showed not only those two possibilities, but a score of others.

Soy bean production, a comparatively new crop to Illinois, is one of the oldest in the world, farm experts here said. Its production dates back to 5,000 years ago in its home country of Manchuria, China.

The by-products developed from the bean in the last few years include chop suey sprouts and food sauces; rubber linoleum and lard substitutes; crude and refined oils and glycerine; enamels, paints, varnishes and printers' inks; soaps, artificial ivory and resin; candlestick and core binder material from which casts for producing metal parts are made.

NORVELL STORE BURGLARIZED SUNDAY NIGHT

At Chillicothe, Nearly $7,000 Worth of Coats and Dresses Taken By the Thieves.

The Norvell dry goods store at Chillicothe was burglarized last Sunday night and merchandise to the value of $7,000 was taken. The store was entered sometime between the hours of 7 and 9 o'clock. A door in the rear was found open at nine o'clock by a member of the night police force, who was making his third round.

This is the second time this store was burglarized in two years. In February, 1926, the store was entered and the safe was bolted and some $1,500 was taken.

SOCIAL CALENDAR

Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Grooms, of Circleville, entertained to dinner Sunday Mrs. Lida Heath and Mrs. J. M. Timmons, of Williamsport and Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Timmons and daughter, Virginia, and Mr. and Mrs. Bob Farmer, of Lancaster.

Mr. and Mrs. N. G. Spangler were guests of a party given by Mr. and Mrs. William Diehl at Bexley last Sunday. The affair was given in honor of the members who made a trip to Europe last spring. People were present from Akron; Lexington, Kentucky; Columbus and this city. The affair was a most novel one. Mr. Diehl is an amateur photographer and on the trip abroad took views on board the vessel and also the places they visited, among them the catacombs at Rome. Following a dinner to his guests they were given the surprise of their lives when they were led thru an underground gallery to a cave. The guests carried little lighted tapers, to illuminate their way, which was brilliantly lighted with electricity. Here they were shown ten reels of the scenes and places they had visited abroad. Five of the reels were shown in the afternoon following luncheon and five in the evening following dinner.

Sunflower Specialty

The bureau of plant industry says that it is not uncommon for a sunflower to produce double flowers. The species can be perpetuated by planting the seeds of the double-flowered plant. While every flower will not be double, there will be an increased number. This has been worked out by botanists in the past and seed for double-flowered sunflowers are now on the market.

Chicago Boasting of Record Loud Speaker

When the embattled farmers of Massachusetts fired the shot that was heard round the world, they were revolutionary pioneers in more than one respect. They did the first piece of educational broadcasting, on a worldwide wave length, but there was this criticism: it took too long for the message to travel.

Recently there has come to the fore a desire on the part of merchants not only to get current news from great distances with which to attract the passersby, but also to extend the hearing range either throughout a store department or up and down the avenues approaching the store. To meet this need, loud speakers of various powers have been developed, with Chicago now boasting of one that will carry six miles. It weighs 180 pounds and has an air column of ten feet.

Mythological Hero

Orpheus was a legendary poet and musician of ancient Greece, famed for his mastery of the lyre, which he received from Apollo. He accompanied the Argonauts in their search for the Golden fleece.

Proper Food for Parrot

Parrots in the wild state live on seed and fruit, and should, while in captivity, be fed as nearly as possible the same kind of food. They should be fed sunflower seed, hemp seed, boiled yellow corn, stale bread, soaked in water, an occasional piece of apple or banana, roasted peanuts, dry crackers. Plenty of water and gravel should be kept in the cage. The parrot's cage should be cleaned every day.

Paying by Check

Every day more business concerns are using checks instead of cash for their pay-rolls.

There are several excellent reasons for this:

Paymaster and messenger holdups are eliminated.

Error is prevented.

The employee cannot lose his pay nor have it stolen.

Being paid by check encourages the employee to bank his salary, and thus encourages saving.

There are good reasons why every one should pay by check.

STILL GET THRILL AT PENNY ARCADES
New York Sticks to Ancient Amusement.
New York.—Eight o'clock in the morning is the zero hour for entertainment in New York. Nothing remains, apparently, but to crawl into a taxi and give the driver your home address.
That is, of course, if you do not belong to that class of New Yorkers who know all the little intimate things about their home town. For instance, that when it's eight o'clock in the morning, when you've dissipated the best part of your bank roll, when you still prefer any place to home, you can turn toward Sixth avenue and find the bacchanal spirit running riot to the strains of a mechanical piano in a penny arcade.
The early morning recreation problem has been solved by this thoughtful amusement resort that flings wide its doors at 7:30 and within half an hour has collected a swarming throng of customers.
The silken and the seamy citizenry of New York is there. Don't be surprised to see the former in tuxedos and spangles debark noisily from an open victoria at the curb.
Gold Mine to Arcade.
These rich once-in-a-whiles are a gold mine, for they "do" the works at an outlay of $1.50 each—the tariff on the entire 150 machines designed for the public's enjoyment. They may even give another dollar to be photographed before the canvas scenery of a bar painted with such sentiments as "Drink Here and Die at Home."
The average customer, however, is good for only about three cents, the change from a breakfast of cold slaw, an ice cream sandwich and orangeade at a cheap restaurant next door.
Tim, the florid faced manager, is probably the worst cynic on Sixth avenue. It beats his Irish understanding how crooked a guy can be in the matter of a cent.
"You'd never believe it, but there are people that will swear falsely they put in the money and the machinery wouldn't go," he deplores.
Tim asserts that his employees get gipped out of plenty of money a year this way. He's been changing nickels for pennies during two decades of service for the single corporation which monopolizes ownership of the few remaining peep palaces in New York.
Tim says that about 1,100 people come in every day. And at least 1,007 are out on the pretext of visiting the Sixth avenue employment agencies that cluster around the district at the rate of ten to a block. Although the arcade keeps open till midnight, business falls off perceptibly as soon as the job exchanges close.
The arcade offers a diversity of amusements. The athletic, the superstitious, the musically bent, the practical, and, of course, the seeker for thrills, have all been remembered.
Fortunes Told.
Visitors come first to fifteen or sixteen fortune telling devices. The Little Gypsy, for the small consideration of a copper, will answer briefly, "Can I trust my love?" "Am I a liar?" "Is there any hope for me?" or "Is my salary going to be raised?" She won't give you any particulars, except registering "Yes," "No" or "Maybe." But who would say that it isn't worth the price?
The mystic wheel also assures you that you can have a preview of your bridegroom. While the wheel actually comes across with his photograph, there's a futility in it at that. The man looks ready to leap on a bicycle built for two. If he is still alive somewhere he probably wants a wife who can run a wheel chair.
The surprising artistic allurements is the crank driven microscope or peep show that gives you two eyefuls for the same reasonable price asked in 1897. The shapely ladies have stood the strain remarkably well.
"The Death Chair at Sing Sing" has exhausted its melodramatic horrors and works no longer. The attraction called "What Girls do When They Are Alone" gives the educational information that they skip rope clad in flannel night dresses. Another well worn one is the caption, "For Men Only." Here you have a whimsical little piece about an artist who falls asleep while drawing a skeleton. In his dreams his model assumes the well rounded lines of a 1900 chorus girl, whom his modest subconscious mind discreetly covers with tights of a heavy woolen texture.
On your way out treat yourself to a penny squirt of perfume and stop to listen to Edison's first conception of a gramophone. If you've never heard "Valencia" or "The Prisoner's Song" stick rubber tubes in your ears and turn on the current.

AMUSEMENTS
John Gilbert says it with thrills in "Twelve Miles Out."
The new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer mystery drama now playing at the Met theater opens with a gasp; thrill and sensations cram every instant—and still thru it all runs a thread of genuine artistry that makes it unique among the picture offerings of the season.
William Anthony McGuire's famous stage play was a sensation before the footlights, but of course the stage could not turn an oven to the task of furnishing more thrills. This is what the picture did.
The sensational race between the rum-runners and the revenue cutters the daring kidnapping on the high seas that developed into one of the sweetest of love stories set in a maze of intrigue and battle; these are some of the high spots in the daring drama.
Gilbert is glorious as the swash-buckling motorcycle daredevil who becomes the nemesis of the rum-runners; he has all the dash and fire of Bardleys and all the romantic appeal of "The Merry Widow" all embodied in an ultra-modern young man.
Joan Crawford makes a charming heroine, and contributes one of the finest pieces of acting in her rather meteoric career.
Ernest Torrence delights in unusual roles, and as McCue, the big rum-runner, he gives a remarkable portrayal of a nature in which viciousness is mixed with a queer brand of whimsical humor. Bert Roach, Eileen Percy, Tom O'Brien, Edward Earle, Paulette Duval, Dorothy Sebastian and Gwene Lee, all give splendidly balanced performances.
Jack Conway, who triumphed in "Brown of Harvard" gave a splendid example of intelligent direction, and A. P. Younger's adaptation from the stage play left nothing to be desired. Thrills and romance, artistry and sensation; this picture has them all.

Pilgrims Go to Palestine
In connection with the war memorial unveiling in Jerusalem a large party of pilgrims is journeying on a modern pilgrimage to that city. The war graves and battlefields of Palestine and Egypt are included in the itinerary, and all places of Biblical interest around Jerusalem will be seen. The stop there has been timed to coincide with the unveiling of the memorial by Lord Allenby. The party will visit the pyramids and Cairo, and later will stop at Rhodes, Crete, Cyprus, Malta, Naples and other places of interest.

LOANS UP TO $500

When all white elephants are moulded into one single elephant how easy it will be to get out the bow and arrow and rid the world of white elephants forever. And when all your bills are assembled into one debt, how much easier it is to pay by centering your efforts on this one obligation. By this method you can climb out of debt without troubles and more expenses pulling you back in again.
The City Loan joins your bills into one and then reduces your payments to a minimum to save you money. This system of settling up is sure to please you and will doubtless fit right in your own case as it has in thousands of others.

Essay on Geese
The following composition on geese was written, according to Capper's Weekly, by a schoolboy in St. Louis: "Geese is a heavy-set bird with a head on one side and a tail on the other. His feet is set so far back on his running gear that they nearly miss his body. Some geese is ganders and has a curl in his tail. Ganders don't lay or set. They just eat, loaf and go swimming. If I had to be a geese, I would rather be a gander. Geese do not give milk, but give eggs, but for me, give me liberty or give me death."

Early American Food

WITH the present rage for everything early American from outside walls to inside walnut, interest is being revived in early American cookery. There is something strangely incongruous in sitting down to a beautiful mahogany table, set with charming china of several generations ago and mellowed perhaps by pewter candlesticks and quaint pewter bowls, only to have appear before you suddenly a heaping dish of Chop Suey. It is like dreaming in an old Colonial manor and waking up in Hong Kong.

Why not dig up from the family archives the old yellowed cookbook and try some of the good things recorded there? One old Colonial cookbook that came under the auctioneer's hammer now rests in the Library of Congress. It is an octavo containing eighty-eight pages of handwritten paper, bound in wooden boards a quarter of an inch thick, over which is stretched a cover of pigskin parchment. Hand-sewed with stout linen thread, it is further secured by three parchment bands laced in the boards. Its pages are yellow with age and it bears the following autograph "Catherine Taylor, her Book: 1753." The recipes are distinctly English; wines, meats, puddings and pastries are the headings. Vegetables are not mentioned.

Her "Nursery Pudding" would delight the youngsters of today no doubt as much as it did those of two hundred years ago. It stands thus:

"Take a white loaf, pare ye Crust off. Slice it and put to it a half-pound of Butter unmelted, a Quarter of a Pound of Sugar and a little Nutmeg. Pour on a Pint of Milk Scalding hot, cover it and Let it stand two hours."

Reckless Recipes

In many of Catherine Taylor's recipes, however, she speaks recklessly of such minor ingredients as "a dozen of Eggs" and "two pounds of Butter," which leads one to believe that the high cost of living was not one of her problems.

But rummaging around among other Colonial cookbooks other delightful and more economical recipes may be found. Many of these will be just as delicious and more simple to make, by using canned products which, though not available in those days, will be welcomed by the modern cook. Cobblers and fruit dumpings, which figure largely in Catherine Taylor's cookbook, can be quickly made by using the delicious fruits which are ready-prepared for us.

Peach Cobbler. Line a pie pan three inches deep, liberally with short crust, rolled rather more than a quarter-inch thick. Fit well; prick all over with a blunt fork. Fill with prepared peaches, put on an upper crust, a quarter-inch thick and plenty big enough, barely press the crust edges together. Prick the top, and cook in a hot oven one-half to three-quarters of an hour. Take up, remove top crust, lay it inverted upon another plate, sweeten the hot fruit liberally, adding also a good lump of the best butter. Mix well through the fruit, then dip out enough of it to make a thick layer over the top crust. Serve hot with brandy sauce or cold with plain, thick, sweet cream.

Fig Pudding: Run through the grinder one pound of figs (those in cans will be found fresh and clean, ready for use), half pound of suet, and three cups of biscuit crumbs. Add six eggs, beaten very light, with two cups of sugar. Beat again, then steam or boil in buttered mold, tied in well-scalded bag, four hours. Serve hot with this sauce. Best to a light cream one cup butter with two cups sugar. Add two eggs very well beaten, then gradually two tablespoons vinegar and one of vanilla. Cook a long time in double boiler, stirring constantly so that it will be smooth. Serve hot.

Fig Pudding can also be purchased already prepared in cans, and scarcely anyone nowadays goes through the elaborate effort of making the plum pudding now widely distributed in cans.

JACKSON YOUTH

Suffers Fractured Skull In Accident Saturday Night North of City.

A 21-year-old youth, Thomas Davis, of Jackson, and Ray Corry, another youth of Jackson, figured in a peculiar accident Saturday evening about 8 o'clock when their machine, driven by Corry, collided with the stone pier in the center of the Scioto Trail that supports the Norfolk & Western Railway bridge at Bell's Siding just north of the city. The boys were enroute to Columbus from their home and were not familiar with the road. The pier is not marked with a light and they did not see it in time to avoid it. Young Davis was thrown through the windshield of the car and his head struck the stone pier, fracturing his skull. The Corry boy was also thrown through the windshield to the road but escaped serious injury.

A passing motorist brought both boys into the city where Dr. Geo. W. Hefner attended them.

It was thought that the Davis boy had been killed outright when he was first picked up and had not regained consciousness when brought to the physician.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Davis, parents of the injured lad, came to the city and removed their son to his home late Saturday night.

A red light at the side of the road some distance away warns autoists of the approach to the bridge and while the pier itself is not lighted the driver should slow down and watch for obstacles when they have been warned by the light at the side of the road.

FAMOUS

Covered Bridge of Civil War Condemned.

(Exclusive Central Press Dispatch.)
Nicholasville, Ky., Oct. 29.—Historic old Camp Nelson bridge, one of the most interesting wooden spans in the United States, has been condemned by highway authorities as unsafe and will be maintained hereafter purely because of its historical associations.

Locally it is known as the Wernwag bridge. It was built in 1838 by A. L. Wernwag, a pioneer bridge contractor.

It spans the Kentucky river near the Palisades and is 225 feet in length.

An unusual feature of its construction is that not a single ounce of metal is used in it. It is pinned together by the oak pins used by the original builder nearly 90 years ago. It is said to be the longest single-span cantilever bridge in the world.

When the Civil War started, it was the only bridge crossing the Kentucky river. General Nelson, with his Federal forces, seized it and built Camp Nelson nearby. After the battle of Perryville, the Union hold on the span was never seriously disputed.

Ruins of the old camp still are in evidence, and nearby is the national cemetery where more than 3,000 soldiers of the "sixties" lie buried.

For many years the camp ruins, the cemetery and the bridge have been of interest in this part of the hills of Kentucky.

UNIQUE COINS IN THIS COLLECTION

One of the most valuable collections of old United States coins of every denomination is owned by H. DeLong, of No. 314 South Twelfth street, Philadelphia.

Mr. DeLong has been collecting old coins and paper currency since his childhood days. He is now sixty-one years old. In a gold frame he has a collection that he values at $1,000. The redeemable value of the framed currency in an American bank would be approximately $82.

One of the most unique coins in the collection is a brass, undated cent. On one side of the cent is engraved a bust of Washington. On the other side is inscribed "Success to the United States."

In the frame are other such rare coins as 25-cent, 50-cent, $1 and $3 gold pieces. Three, 5, 10, 15, 25 and 50-cent denominations of shinplasters are also included in the collection. Also half-cent coppers that date back to 1797.—Philadelphia Record.

Credit to Motorists?

The automobile has been responsible for the development of a sturdier and incidentally a smarter race of roosters and chickens, according to Richard C. Haldeman, president of the Pennsylvania Motor federation. Haldeman asserts that the large number of chickens killed on the roads during the early days of the automobile age wooded out "mentally unfit roosters and hens." He asserts that instead of being blamed for the chickens which are still killed the motorists should be thanked, for they are aiding the farmer in developing a better grade of fowls.

Gold Didn't Materialize

A Chicago inventor named Brice, in 1897, was seeking a patent on a process for making gold from a mixture of antimony, iron and sulphur. The patent office would not grant it without proof that the idea had merit, and the then secretary of the treasury was persuaded to direct the mint bureau to try the thing out. There must have been something wrong about the methods of the treasury laboratory, for not a particle of gold or silver was obtained.

Eleanor's Way of Escape
By CLARICE MACKIE

(Copyright.)

ELEANOR BRODIE went up to her room and sat down. She had told her family that she had broken her engagement to Mark Allen and her brother Roger had informed her that it was a good thing. "He is a rotter," muttered Roger from his book.
The others all murmured something or other, and her mother had smiled sympathetically. None of them had liked Mark Allen.
That was not the reason she had broken her engagement. She had received a letter from a broken-hearted girl in another city who had told her of Mark's perfidy.
The next day she spoke to her mother about taking a trip West to visit an uncle who had a ranch.
The ranch was Eleanor's heart. She learned to ride, and soon the wide open plains were her playground. "I wish Uncle Alfred," said Eleanor, "that you had some hopeless bachelor cowboy who would ride with me."
Uncle Alfred thought for a long time. Then he removed his pipe from between his lips and smiled. "I believe I know just the man to go about with you, Eleanor," he said slowly. "Over on the next place to the south lives a man whom I have known for a long time—his name is Walter Jamieson—bachelor—sort of a recluse—lives there alone with a Chinese cook and one man of all work, reads and writes and rides around all day the year around, except when he is traveling. I heard that he was disappointed in love once upon a time. Had lots of money. Is perfectly bullet-proof where women are concerned. He is your future escort!"
The next day when Eleanor came downstairs with the morning in her blue eyes, her uncle called across the table:
"Be ready at nine o'clock, Eleanor. Walter Jamieson is coming to ride with you—going to take you to his favorite canyon beyond the first hill. Don't be frivolous—Walter can't stand much of that, you know."
"Now, Alfred," protested Aunt Laura.
But Uncle Alfred only laughed and went out to join his cowboys who were starting on a long ride.
Eleanor talked to her aunt about various matters, but they did not speak of Walter Jamieson again. Eleanor believed that he was probably some tired old bachelor and Uncle Alfred was really making fun of her, but presently when she was ready to go out she took a last look at herself in her trim khaki riding things, her soft hat on her ruddy hair framing her piquant face.
Aunt Laura sat on the veranda talking to a young man in riding things—very correct as to texture and cut, with a wide hat swinging from one shapely brown hand. The sun shone on the golden tan of his skin and pronounced him a handsome young man—perhaps thirty-three, with very nice brown eyes and hair to match.
"Eleanor, dear," said Aunt Laura, "may I present Mr. Jamieson, our very good friend and neighbor," and then Eleanor found herself shaking hands with Walter Jamieson, and very soon the two of them were riding out of the yard. Eleanor was sure that her aunt enjoyed the joke as much as Uncle Alfred had done, but she soon found that there would be no time for retrospection with Mr. Jamieson. He wanted to talk and he wanted her to talk. He could ride like a centaur, and he was the nicest, friendliest sort of a young man!
They were very good friends before the ride was over. They had each confessed at being completely fooled by Uncle Alfred, and Eleanor blamed herself for forgetting so soon that she would never love another man after Mark Allen. Her good sense told her that perhaps Mark Allen was not the perfect man!
She and Walter Jamieson agreed that they would not permit Uncle Alfred to believe his jest had succeeded, so when they came back to the ranch, they each maintained a puzzling solemnity that quite devastated Uncle Alfred.
"Gosh, Eleanor," said her uncle frankly, "I just believed that you two would eat each other up! He's writing a book—yep, he writes cowboy novels—sells a lot of 'em, too, so they say. But you're so young and pretty—gee whizz—the young men of today have no pep at all!"
When Eleanor reached her own room she sat down and laughed and laughed, and then, after awhile, a tender little smile curled her lips.
As for Jamieson, he smoked three pipes one after the other that first night, and then he locked up all the sheets of his latest story, closed his typewriter, and spoke to the dancing flame on the hearth.
"I see all the attributes for my own love story—and I am going to write it, too—for the first time—she is the dearest, sweetest thing in the world!"
After two months of this, Eleanor came home one day with a dreamy smile on her lips and a large diamond on the third finger of her left hand.
When she told Uncle Alfred and his wife, they laughed right out. "We have known it since the first day," they told her, after congratulatory kisses.
And that day she telegraphed home. "Coming home to be married to Walter Jamieson. Wonderfully happy."

"How did you play today?" asked the wife of the world's worst golfer.
"Terrible; I got 144," replied the husband sorrowfully.
"What does a good player like Bobby Jones go around in?" asked the wife.
"It's nothing for him to get a 72," was the reply.
"Well, you shouldn't feel so blue. He ought to be twice as good as you, hadn't he?" Inquired the sweet creature.

Vinegar Without Alcohol

The bureau of chemistry says that, while there may be a very little alcohol left in vinegar, it is almost always entirely used up by the acetic fermentation which takes place.

How Abercrombie Got Dragged In

By ADALAIDE D. HUFF

(Copyright.)

GRACE O'BRAIDY could not bear to look down, for when she did her corn-flower blue eyes espied the place upon her frock where a button had been but was no more. At one time the place of the missing button had been half way up the skirt, but Grace had quickly decided to steal one from near the belt and put it in the gaping place. It would be less conspicuous that way, but still it was only robbing Peter to pay Paul. Buy a new set, somebody had suggested but they forgot that even buttons cost money and even a little money is a lot if you haven't it. She never told anyone, but she got up fifteen minutes early every morning so as to have the extra time to detour via the poorer streets to Hansel's department store where she worked, for it caused her positive pain to go down the main street in a dress that lacked a button. She was keenly conscious of the chic get-up of the other business girls as they hurried smartly along on their high-heeled shoes, brushing past her. Until she went to work she had not been so conscious of her own shabbiness, for the high school from which she graduated had been in a poorer section of the city and many of the girls were even more shabbily dressed than she.

Often she would overhear the other girls in her department, their heads close together, planning parties and fetes to which she was never invited. It was one day during a lull in trade while she was leaning against the counter, that she overheard a conversation that sent the blood rushing to her cheeks.

"Let's ask Grace O'Braidy," said a voice on the other side of the post. "Nix! This is a swell blowout and she looks like her grandmother's old maid sister in that crazy serge she wears. And I bet she hasn't got another stitch to her back."

"Oh, but she's so pretty!" the other girl defended kindly.

"My goodness! You give me cat-fits!"

The two walked away and all the rest of the afternoon Grace struggled to fight back the stinging tears.

"I will have a new dress if I have to go upstairs to the president and beg him for it!" she vowed to herself, a grin set to her soft little mouth, a glint in her eyes.

"Mr. Abercrombie," she said to the kind floorwalker a few minutes later, "do you guess—you could let me off a few minutes early this afternoon?"

"What do you want to do?" he asked.

"I—I just must have a new—" but her voice broke on the words, a big choking lump rose in her throat and she burst into tears. Quickly she hid her face in the crook of her arm and turned away, but she felt a detaining hand on her shoulder.

"Let's go in here," he said kindly as he led her into his cubby hole of an office and closed the door. "Now, what's the matter, child?"

And in an outburst of weeping Grace told him the whole story.

"You poor little kid," he soothed, "but when it comes to looks you've got the whole bunch skinned; disposition, too, I expect. Now, you run along back to your counter and forget it."

"You're awfully n-ice to me," she said gratefully, averting her head to hide her tear-stained face. Later in the afternoon he approached her counter again.

"Miss O'Braidy," he said smiling, "How about having supper together and taking in a show afterward?"

The other girls nearby stopped what they were doing and gaped open-mouthed at the floorwalker.

"All right," he said a second later, taking her answer for granted. "Wait for me just inside the door on Eighth. I'll be a few minutes late."

With a nod he turned and went back to his office. When she met him late that afternoon she put a timid hand on his arm.

"Mr. Abercrombie, it was sweet of you to do it, but you don't have to carry it out," she said.

"I want to do it! I bet we have a good time together. You're just a downright decent little kid and not spoiled like the rest of 'em."

And strange as it may seem Grace forgot her shabbiness for the first time in weeks. They went to a modest little restaurant and ate in a corner all by themselves, then they saw a "movie" afterward. When it was over Grace sighed from sheer happiness.

"I've had such a good time!" she told him, letting her hand rest in his as he held it a moment in parting.

"So have I" he answered with warmth. "And say, let's do it again soon."

That night Abercrombie could not sleep for the vision of corn-flower blue eyes and a little red mouth that seemed so pathetically eager to smile.

"Good Lord, am I falling in love!" he asked himself. "There's something about that slip of a kid that gets me."

His hand tingled as he remembered the feel of her soft fingers against his. "Well, what if I am!" he said to the darkness of his bedroom. "I'm twenty-eight and can support a wife. She's had so many hard knocks she'd know how to appreciate a fellow's struggle. . . . But to try to help the kid and get dragged in like that!"

HUMAN EMOTIONS FOUND IN "DATE BOOK" OF 3000

Entries in Appointment Book Read Much Like "Personals" in Newspapers.

Portland, Ore.—On a dull afternoon when the broad daylight was still in the air it is interesting to visit a department store and read the "appointment book."

There one may find the entire gamut of human emotions. At least this is possible in Portland and this city of the Pacific Northwest, with its pioneer background and New England complex, probably doesn't differ much from any other.

Who uses these "appointment books" and what are they?

Every one uses them and they are ledgers which were first installed for convenience of shopping flappers who, incidentally, wanted to leave a message for the "boy friend" or for a "girl chum."

Users of the ledgers, or "appointment books," range from gray-haired grandmothers, irritated by their first false teeth, to scarlet-tipped grand daughters, about equally annoyed by misplaced mascara. But women haven't a monopoly. Scribbling in the books also will be found the grumbling youth, struggling with his first long pants and cigarette, and hard-boiled business men and laborers.

And what does one find?

Everything, from painful prayers to profanity, from domestic problems to love-making—bits of tragedy, exasperation, a laugh here and there and other exhibits of the weakness of the spirit and flesh of mere mortals. It is commonplace for the most part, but one also finds intense feelings striving for an outlet in the written word.

Just a few samples memorized from the pages of a Portland "appointment book" follow:

"Where the h—l you been? Waited all afternoon." Probably a husband—tone indicates married at least 19 years and the chances are that a 15-minute wait is what he classified as "all afternoon."

"All is forgiven." Go home to your little woman. Don't forget the baby's clothes." Now isn't that a rare combination? Ranging from the threat of a broken home, and then flying upward to the possibility of a glorious reunion but dropping to drab domestic affairs in the next breath.

One can almost see a well-meaning man doing his best for a pair of friends. Too many movie titles had used that "all is forgiven" phrase to permit him to pass it up. Next he told the story, clear and concise, he forming some erring male that no rolling-pin barrage awaited him. And then came the jolting reminder of duty—"don't forget the baby's clothes."

But the crowning message of all, causing one to wonder whether dealers in moonshine are using the "appointment books" is the following:

"That gin was awful. Turned both my plates to chewing gum. Can't you do better tonight?"

And so it goes, page after page—some of which seem almost to have been jotted down solely for the amusement of readers.

Hungarian Dance Is Like the Charleston

Berlin.—Anybody who can dance the Hungarian czardas should automatically be able to dance the American charleston, in the opinion of Ellen Richter, Hungarian movie star.

"The movements of the legs, the clapping together of the knees, and all the other distortions which, if executed gracefully, are decidedly beautiful, are about the same in both the czardas and the charleston," Miss Richter observes. "Of course, there are rhythmical differences. Then, too, the czardas, even in its simplest form, is a figure dance, which the charleston is not."

Beavers Build a Dam Out of a Scarecrow

New York.—Beavers seem to like scarecrows. A colony of beavers built a dam in the Palisades interstate park system near St. Johns village that flooded a highway. A forest ranger demolished the dam and put on the site a dummy made of khaki, straw and a hat. Returning a few days later, he found the beavers had torn the dummy apart and made a new dam with the pieces.

Crime Board Plans Drive Against 'Fence'

New York.—To reduce criminal activities, the "fence," or receiver of stolen goods, must be abolished, Richard Washburn Child, chairman of the national crime commission, says.

With this idea in mind, the commission will submit to a general conference to be held in Washington the last week in October a uniform law, to be presented to the legislatures of all states which is designated to place a heavy penalty upon receivers of stolen goods.

Maxwell S. S. Smith, chief counsel of the National Association of Attorneys, said a member of the commission, Richard Washburn Child, chairman of the national crime commission, says.
